

About the Authors

Ivan F. Beutler, Money Aspirations About Living Well: Middle School Student Perceptions, is a Professor in the School of Family Life at Brigham Young University. Recent publications include “Linking Financial Strain to Marital Instability: Examining the Roles of Emotional Distress and Marital Interaction,” Journal of Family and Economic Issues (2007) and “Consumer Economic Socialization,” a chapter in the Handbook of Consumer Financial Behavior Research (2008). His current research emphasis examines the internal economy of families and the effect of intra-familial resource allocations and human capital investment on money attitudes, values, and spending behaviors of adolescents and emerging adults. He earned a Master’s degree in Economics and a Ph.D. in Family Economics from Purdue University. He has responsibility for upper division coursework in family finance and principles of economy in family life.

Lucy B. Beutler, Money Aspirations About Living Well: Middle School Student Perceptions, is a part time Faculty member in the School of Family Life at Brigham Young University. She directs an undergraduate mentored learning “Money in the Family” class that investigates paths by which teens and early adults come to experience negative outcomes associated with a consumption oriented lifestyle and excessive dependence on consumer credit. Research findings are presented annually at the Mary Lou Fulton Mentored Student Research Conference and at national meetings of the Association for Financial Counseling and Planning Education.

Sonya Britt, The Influence of Perceived Spending Behaviors on Relationship Satisfaction, is a doctoral student studying Personal Financial Planning at Texas Tech University. She is a graduate assistant for Red to Black™, a peer-to-peer financial counseling program at Texas Tech. Sonya received her Master’s degree from Kansas State University while studying marriage and family therapy. She is an Accredited Financial Counselor and Licensed Marriage and Family Therapist. Her research interests include studying money dynamics within families.

Brenda J. Cude, HOPE or No-HOPE: Merit-based College Scholarship Status and Financial Behaviors Among College Students, is a Professor and Undergraduate Coordinator in the Department of Housing and Consumer

Economics at the University of Georgia. She also directs the operations of the Georgia Peer Financial Counseling Program, a peer-to-peer financial management education program for college students in Georgia. Her research interests include college student financial behaviors and consumer information search. She has published over 100 journal articles and papers in proceedings.

Kimberlee Davis, Valuing the Implementation of Financial Literacy Education, is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Family and Consumer Sciences at Texas State University at San Marcos. She earned a Ph.D. from Texas Tech University in the Department of Applied and Professional Studies in Family and Consumer Sciences Education with an emphasis in Personal Financial Planning. In addition, she holds a M.Ed. in Counseling from Texas Tech University and a B.S. from Texas State University at San Marcos. Dr. Davis is a National Certified Counselor through the National Board for Certified Counselors and an Accredited Financial Counselor through the Association for Financial Counseling and Planning Education. Her research interests include college student financial behaviors, delivery and evaluation of financial education, and the financial counseling process.

Miti P. Desai, HOPE or No-HOPE: Merit-Based College Scholarship Status and Financial Behaviors Among College Students, is a Master’s student in the Department of Housing and Consumer Economics at the University of Georgia. She received her Bachelor’s degree in Consumer Economics from the University of Georgia. Her research interests include understanding the use of social networking sites among college students and personal financial management among college students.

Sharon A. DeVaney, Book Review: Handbook of Consumer Finance Research, is a Professor in the Department of Consumer Sciences and Retailing at Purdue University where she serves as the CFP® Program Director and the Graduate Studies Director. She teaches undergraduate courses in retirement planning and ethics and compliance in financial planning and graduate courses in household economic behavior and the economics of aging. Her research interests include retirement planning, self-employment, credit use, and distance education. Her research has been funded by AARP, the National Institute on Aging, USDA, and the National Endowment for Financial Education. She is the author of more than 60 refereed articles, nine chapters, numerous articles in conference proceedings, and six Web sites. She has received awards for both teaching and research. She serves on the editorial boards of Financial Counseling and Planning and the Journal of Consumer Affairs. She is an Associate Editor of the Journal of Family and Consumer Sciences and is on the advisory board of the Journal of Financial Planning. She received the B.S. and M.S. from South Dakota State University and a Ph.D. from The Ohio State University. In 2004, she was named a Distinguished Alumna of South Dakota State University.

Dorothy Bagwell Durband, Valuing the Implementation of Financial Literacy Education, is Associate Professor of Personal Financial Planning and Associate Chair of the Department of Applied and Professional Studies at Texas Tech University, Lubbock, TX. She also directs the operations of Red to Black™, a financial counseling program for Texas Tech students, faculty, and staff. She received a Ph.D. in Family Financial Management from Virginia Tech and holds a M.S. degree from Texas Woman's University and a B.S. from Louisiana State University. She is an AFCPE® Accredited Financial Counselor. Her research interests include financial behaviors, financial counseling techniques, and employee financial education.

John E. Gilliam, Spousal Differences in Financial Risk Tolerance, is an Assistant Professor in the Division of Personal Financial Planning at Texas Tech University. His entry into academic life is strongly influenced by over 25 years of professional experience as a financial advisor. His research and academic interests include the assessment of financial risk tolerance, financial risk tolerance in couples, the impact of behavioral heuristics and biases in financial planning, intra-cohort differences among baby boomers, and health care considerations during retirement. He is a Certified Financial Planner™, Charter Life Underwriter, and Chartered Financial Consultant.

Joseph W. Goetz, Spousal Differences in Financial Risk Tolerance and HOPE or No-HOPE: Merit-Based College Scholarship Status and Financial Behaviors Among College Students, is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Housing and Consumer Economics at the University of Georgia. He teaches courses in the Family Financial Planning program. He received his undergraduate degree in psychology from the University of Missouri-Columbia. He holds a M.S. (Personal Financial Planning), M.A. (Psychology), and Ph.D. (Consumer Economics/Financial Planning) from Texas Tech University. Goetz received the 2007 ACCI Dissertation Award. His research interests include financial risk tolerance, financial behavior change, behavioral economics, financial counseling, and financial planning pedagogy.

Briana S. Nelson Goff, The Influence of Perceived Spending Behaviors on Relationship Satisfaction, is an Associate Professor of Marriage and Family Therapy in the School of Family Studies and Human Services and Associate Dean for Academic Affairs, College of Human Ecology at Kansas State University. She earned her Master's degree in marriage and family therapy from Kansas State University and her Doctorate from Texas Tech University. Dr. Nelson Goff's clinical experience and research specialization is with traumatic stress symptoms in trauma survivor couples, families, and children. Her work has expanded to international trauma, as she has worked in Bosnia-Herzegovina as part of a team through National Research Council grants to work with survivors of the war in Bosnia, particularly children without parental care. One of the most unique aspects of her work at K-State is her development of the Trauma Research, Education, and Consultation at K-State (TRECK) Team. This program includes graduate and undergraduate students, and over 90 students have been involved in the TRECK Team research and projects since it began. Members of the team have conducted research on trauma in couples; submitted and published professional journal articles; presented workshops at state, national, and international conferences; provided workshops and education for non-professionals and community members throughout Kansas; and provided clinical therapy services for trauma survivors and their family members. Since 2004, She and the TRECK Team have focused their research on soldiers who have served in Operation Iraqi Freedom (Iraq) and Operation Enduring Freedom (Afghanistan) and their partners to understand the individual and systemic effects of war deployments and trauma in couples. From January 2005 through December 2007, Dr. Nelson Goff served as a project coordinator in charge of developing a State plan for disaster behavioral health in Kansas, through the Kansas All-Hazards Behavioral Health (KAHBH) Program. Currently, she is the School of Family Studies and Human Services Military Family Programs Coordinator, where she is in charge of developing collaborative educational and clinical programs for military families in the state.

Elizabeth E. Gorham, Family Economics Research Priorities Set, is an Associate Professor in the Department of Design, Merchandising, and Consumer Sciences at South Dakota State University in Brookings. Her research focuses on issues related to the use of credit, debt reduction, determinants of savings behavior, estate planning, and financial education. Currently, she is working to educate Native Americans in personal finance on the challenges of households due to rising prices and continues to promote estate planning and emergency preparation. Her preparation for this work includes a B.S. in home economics education from Iowa State University, a M.S. in household economics and management from Utah State University, and a Ph.D. in family resource management from Oregon State University.

John E. Grable, The Influence of Perceived Spending Behaviors on Relationship Satisfaction and Book Review: Winning with Options, holds the Vera Mowery McAninch Professor of Human Development and Family Studies Professorship at Kansas State University. He received his undergraduate degree in economics and business from the University of Nevada, an MBA from Clarkson University, and a Ph.D. from Virginia Tech. He is the Certified Financial Planner Board of Standards Inc. and International Association of Registered Financial Consultants registered undergraduate and graduate program director at Kansas State University. Teams of undergraduate financial planning students mentored by Dr. Grable won the National Collegiate Financial Planning Championship in 2000, 2003, 2005, and 2006. Dr. Grable also serves as the Director of The Institute of Personal Financial Planning at K-State. Prior to entering the academic profession he worked as a pension/benefits administrator and later as a Registered Investment Advisor in an asset management firm. Dr. Grable served as the founding editor for the Journal of Personal Finance, a rigorous peer-reviewed research journal. His research interests include financial risk-tolerance assessment, financial planning help-seeking behavior, and financial wellness assessment. He has been the recipient of several research and publication awards and grants and is active in promoting the link between research and financial planning practice where he has published more than 60 refereed papers. He has served on the Board of Directors of the International Association of Registered Financial Consultants (IARFC), as Treasurer for the American Council on Consumer Interests (ACCI), and on the Research Advisory Council of the Take Charge America Institute (TCAI) for Consumer Education and Research at the University of Arizona. In 2004, he won the prestigious Cato Award for Distinguished Journalism in the Field of Financial Services, and in 2006, he was honored with the IARFC Founders Award. In 2007, he was awarded the Dawley-Scholar Award for Faculty Excellence in Student Development.

Vickie L. Hampton, Spousal Differences in Financial Risk Tolerance, is a Professor of Personal Financial Planning and head of the PFP Division at Texas Tech University. She has authored numerous articles on career development and related issues in the financial planning profession, determinants of success on the CFP® Certification Examination, and financial planning guidelines and benchmarks for measuring financial well being of families. Hampton teaches Personal Financial Planning Capstone and Introductory classes at the undergraduate and graduate levels. Currently, Hampton is President-Elect of the Academy of Financial Services and a member of the NEFE Academic Advisory Council. Over the past 10 years, Vickie has been active on national boards serving on the Certified Financial Planner (CFP) Board of Governors, the CFP Board of Examiners, the Board of Trustees for the American College, and the Academy of Financial Services Board. She chaired the 1999 CFP Board Job Analysis Committee and was on the steering committee for the AFS and CFP Board Model Financial Planning Curriculum Project. Hampton joined the Texas Tech faculty and the Center for Financial Responsibility in 1999. She received her M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in Family and Consumption Economics at the University of Illinois-Urbana. Before coming to Texas Tech, She taught and conducted research in personal financial planning at the University of Texas-Austin.

Frances C. Lawrence, Family Economics Research Priorities Set, holds the George Cire and Lena Grand Williams Alumni Professorship at Louisiana State University. She conducts research and teaches courses related to financial management, consumer economics, consumer law, welfare reform, and economic development. She has published in numerous prestigious journals, and her teaching expertise has been recognized by 17 awards. She currently serves as the Editor of Financial Counseling and Planning.

Angela C. Lyons, Family Economics Research Priorities Set, is an Associate Professor in the Department of Agricultural and Consumer Economics at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Her research focuses on issues related to family finance, household economics, and financial education and program evaluation. Her current research projects examine issues related to household liquidity and credit access, health and financial burden, delinquency and bankruptcy, gender and marital differences in household investment decisions, and the credit usage of college students. She holds a B.A. in Economics and Business from Cornell College, and she received her M.S. and Ph.D. in Economics from the University of Texas at Austin.

J. Kelly McCoy, Money Aspirations about Living Well: Middle School Student Perceptions, is a faculty member in the Department of Home and Family at Brigham Young University—Idaho. He received a Master's degree in Family and Human Development from Utah State University and a Ph.D. in Child and Family Development at the University of Georgia. His research has focused on adolescent relationships with parents, siblings, and friends, with a particular interest in parental involvement in adolescent friendships, adolescent women diagnosed as anorexic, and adolescent attitudes about money. His teaching has included course work on personality and social development and the adolescent in family and other social contexts.

Yoko Mimura, HOPE or No-HOPE: Merit-based College Scholarship Status and Financial Behaviors Among College Students, is a Research Professional in the Department of Housing and Consumer Economics at the University of Georgia. Her current research topics include perceptions toward manufactured housing, family communication and savings behavior among youth, and economic well being of immigrant families. She has a Ph.D. in Consumer Economics from the University of Georgia.

Barbara O'Neill, Book Review: Affluenza: The All-Consuming Epidemic (2nd Edition), holds the rank of Professor II at Rutgers University and is Rutgers Cooperative Extension's Specialist in Financial Resource Management. She also provides national leadership for two Cooperative Extension financial programs, Investing for Your Future and Small Steps to Health and Wealth™, and directed the 5-year MONEY 2000™ savings and debt reduction campaign in the 1990s. O'Neill has written over 1,500 consumer newspaper articles and over 100 articles for academic journals, conference proceedings, and other professional publications. She is a Certified Financial Planner™ (CFP®), chartered retirement planning counselor (CRPC®), accredited financial counselor (AFC), and certified housing counselor (CHC). O'Neill has held various leadership roles in state and national professional associations and served as President of the Association for Financial Counseling and Planning Education in 2003. O'Neill is the author of two trade books, Saving On a Shoestring and Investing On a Shoestring. She has also written three financial case study textbooks and six book chapters and co-authored three books. O'Neill received her Ph.D. in Family Financial Management from Virginia Tech and holds a Master's degree in consumer economics from Cornell University. She has received over two dozen awards from national professional organizations and over $325,000 in funding to support her financial education programs.

Mark White, The Influence of Perceived Spending Behaviors on Relationship Satisfaction, is an Associate Professor of medical family therapy and marriage and family therapy (MFT) in the Department of Child Development and Family Relations at East Carolina University. He received a Master's degree in MFT from Brigham Young University and a Ph.D. in Human Ecology (Specialization: MFT) from Kansas State University. He has taught at Auburn University and Kansas State University. He currently serves as an Associate Editor for the Journal of Marital and Family Therapy. His research interests include family therapy process and outcome and the ways couples cope with a chronic illness.